Librarian Appointed

Clarence C. Gorschels, 47, director of libraries for Central Washington State College, has been named head librarian of South Bay State College. He will join the planning staff of the new college, scheduled to open in the fall of 1965, sometime this summer. As a college teacher of history and political science and librarian for the past 18 years, Gorschels has held appointments at the University of Wisconsin, Columbia University, University of Washington and Washington State University. HE HAS BEEN an active and continuous contributor to professional journals in history, political science and librarianship and is an active member of several professional organizations and societies. A specialist in the development of new college libraries, he was a principal consultant in the construction of the library at Washington State University which has become a model of organization for many new libraries. IN ADDITION, he has had extensive experience in the expansion of established libraries and the administration of complete library systems. Gorschels received his undergraduate training at Wisconsin State College in Oshkosh, and the Bachelor of Library Science at the University

44-Acre Town House Development Revealed

Plans by Barclay-Pearson, Inc., Hawthorne civil engineers, have been approved by the Los Angeles County Planning Commission for the largest low-rise condominium town house yet undertaken in California, the Scottsdale Town House, announced Jack Spahn of Barclay-Pearson. The 600-home project, for which construction by Grand Land Co. has begun, will cover 44 acres of land on the east side of Avalon Boulevard, north of Sepulveda Boulevard. They will be contained in 80 buildings designed on the Town House concept, but with some innovations that single it out from other such developments. EPH FELDMAN, project manager of Grand Land Co., said that streets will be built to similar dimensions of public streets, but will be limited to use of residents and their friends. A private entryway at the development will keep all others out. The buildings, parking, and recreational facilities will be surrounded by a decorative wall enhanced with abutments. A five-acre recreation plot in the center of the project will contain a 7,600-square-foot community building with rooms for games, hobbies and social gatherings; a little league ball park; swimming and wading pools, tennis courts, picnic area; handball courts and a Pop Warner football field. Two children's playgrounds will be located at opposite ends of the project, Feldman said.

SCOTTSDALE Town House will be Barclay-Pearson's fifth major condominium project, according to Spahn, who was responsible for drafting enabling legislation for the building of Burbank's first condominium last year.

In addition to preparing and processing a map for Grand Land Co., other services will include preparation of the site, storm drains, sewers and grading; design, drafting and ultimate recordation of the subdivision map, Feldman said.

Instructor Continues Research

J. A. Grenier, El Camino College history instructor, will study under a University of California research grant in Washington, D. C., two months during the coming summer. The social science instructor will concentrate upon materials made available to him in the Library of Congress, pertinent to his research, "The Origin of Progressive Muckraking." His study is focused upon the techniques utilized by magazines to expose corruption at the turn of the century. Accompanying Grenier to the eastern seaboard will be his wife, Nancy, and their four children. The family's travels will take them to Allegheny, Swarthmore and Columbia colleges, where the doctoral candidate will continue his research.
